If you have ever thought about going solar, now is your chance.

The Morgantown Solar Co-op held an information session Thursday night for people to learn about solar technology, the solar co-op process, and the finances of going solar. Anyone within an hour's drive of Morgantown can sign up. WV SUN is a non-profit that is working with the Morgantown Solar Co-op to help make solar more affordable and accessible.

Karan Ireland, the State Director of WV SUN, says, "Solar is completely doable. Financially, there's never been a better time to go solar. By coming together in the solar co-op, you can save money but also, you can learn about solar. That can be an overwhelming process and this is a great way to get your questions answered."

71 people have already joined the Morgantown Solar Co-op. 3 members have had solar panels installed. The deadline for signing up for the Co-op is September 30th.

For more information and to sign-up, head to WVSUN.org.
